Hannes-Magedanz Notices It's important to note that they have done this deliberately to reduce bandwidth usage. MACROS are pretty much the only reason why I've moved from FileZilla (which is free and fast) to WFTP (which is an expensive and slow server with proprietary software). The WFTP server is slow, but I can bypass that with RouterOS's Mac app (gwrouter) or some other open source project that does the same thing. It's like a popular tethering app like Mac-Tether, but it's open source and won't cost anything. So why do you need Java? Are you hosting a server? What is it for? When i use.cpp file it compiles fine (no errors at all) but when you try to run it with the RobotC (in window's memory view) it crashes with a. A C++ program needs C++. If you're using a free development environment it should be pretty simple to find a non-paid IDE which has a C++ compiler (I won't mention examples because I haven't used them and it's a long list). Any IDE that can handle C++ will have a C++ compiler. Quote: Originally Posted by Gussiedsprog33. Yes, thanks. I'm using the c++ version of RobotC and it is running fine. However, I want to be able to compile and run C++ code with RobotC. For example, I want to use the function bla() with a string (in a C++ program). If you mean bla() is a function in RobotC, then yes you can call it, but it will return nothing. If you want to call a function (or a method) in C++ you need to either compile the C++ file as a C++ program or you need to invoke it through a VirtualMachine like VMWare, VirtualBox or others. A VM is also the only way to make use of OpenCL since that is a technology completely from within the VM. The RobotC and Visual C++ compilers are the only 3e33713323
